INTRODUCTION.

TH E Faculty of Speech, which makes so considerable a Difference between a Man and a Brute, is of excellent Use, as it renders Mankind conversible one with another, and as the various natural Endowments, Observations, Experiences, and Attainments of every individual Man, are hereby, with a wonderful Facility, mutually communicated. And we may add to this the Invention of Letters, by means of which we are not confined within the narrow Limits of our Acquaintance and Contemporaries, but one Man may be acquainted with the Attainments of Multitudes of the wisest Men in Present and Ancient Times, either in his own or remote Countries. Words are those Channels, by which the Knowledge of Things are convey'd to our Understandings: And therefore, upon a right Apprehension of them depends the Rectitude of our Notions; and in order to form our Judgments right, they must be understood in their proper Meaning, used in their true Sense, either in Writing or Speaking: For, if the Words of the Speaker or Writer, though ever so apposite to the Matter, be taken in a wrong Sense, they form erroneous Ideas in the Mind concerning the Thing spoken or written of; and if we use Words in a false and improper Sense, this causes Confusion in the Understanding of the Hearer, and renders the Discourse unintelligible.

It ought, therefore, to be the special Care and Study of every one, who would have his Mind furnished with the useful Knowledge of Things of any kind, to get a true and distinct Idea of the proper Sense and Meaning of Words, and Terms of Art, in which they are express'd, without which no good Progress can be made.

It

INTRODUCTION.

It has therefore been the universal Practice of all polite Nations, to make the Study of Letters the first Business of Life : And because this Accomplishment is necessary to all Persons, and but few, comparatively speaking, have the Advantage of a learned Education to any considerable Proficiency, Dictionaries have in all Languages been compiled, to which, as to Store-houses, such Persons may have recourse, as often as any thing occurs in Conversation or Reading, with which they are unacquainted, or when they themselves would speak or write properly and intelligibly.

And as such Helps have been thought useful in all civilized Nations, they appear more eminently necessary in the English Tongue, not only because it is, perhaps, the most copious Language of any in Europe, but is likewise made up of so great a Variety of other Languages, both Ancient and Modern, as will plainly appear to any one who shall peruse the following Dictionary. Of the Reason of which Mixture, and by what Accidents it was brought about, I shall give the following Account.

That Languages are liable to Changes and Alterations (besides that ancient Confusion of Tongues at the Building of the Tower of Babel) there have been too many Instances to require any Proof. The Causes of Change in Languages are, in general, Three :

First, Commigrations or Conquests of Nations, by which, in Tract of Time, there succeeds a Coalition of the Languages of the Conquerors with the Conquered. So the Italian Language sprang from the Latin, being mixed with German-Gothic : The Spanish from Latin, German, and ancient Gaulish or Morisco : The French from the Latin, German, and ancient Gaulish or Gallie.

Secondly, From Commerce, by which Offices, Dignities, the Names of Wares, and Terms of Traffick, are introduced, which we commonly take with the Wares from the Persons of whom we have them, and new form them according to the Genius of our own Tongue.

Thirdly, From the Esteem and valuable Properties of any particular Language, by which we endeavour to imitate this or that Tongue, as the more Learned, Elegant, Copious, or Expressive. So learned Men all over Europe esteem the Latin and Greek Tongues, as the Treasuries of all Science ; Christian Divines reverence the Hebrew and Greek ; the Turks and Mahometans the Arabick, as the Mistress of Religion ; the Dutch, Germans and English, the French, for its Softness and Smoothness of Expression; the Danes and Swedes the Teutonic, as more copious.

If a Tongue be once esteemed more learned, from thence the Learned commonly borrow Technical Words, or Words of Art; as in Physick, Philosophy, Mathematicks, and others, from the Greek. If it be esteem'd more elegant or fine in Pronunciation, then Courtiers, who are apt to dislike any thing that is common, and the Product of their own Country, and to delight in what is foreign, borrow a great many Words of Complaisance and Address.

First, The ancient Language of Britain is generally allow'd to have been the same with the Gaulic or French (this Island, in all probability, having been first peopled from Gallia) as both Cæsar and Tacitus affirm, and prove, by many strong and conclusive Arguments, as by their Religion, Manners, Customs, and the Nearness of their Situation. But now we have very small Remains of the ancient British Tongue left in England, except in Wales and Cornwall; which will not appear strange when what follows is considered.

Julius Cæsar, some Time before the Birth of our Saviour, in the Time of King Cassivellane, made a Descent upon England, tho' he rather discover'd it than made a Conquest of it; but about the Year of Christ 45, in the Time of Claudius, Aulus Plautius was sent over with some Roman Forces, by whom, and P. Ostorius Scapula, Codigunus, and Caractacus, two Kings of the Britons, were severally overcome in a Battle. A Roman Colony was planted at Malden in Essex, and the Southern Parts thereof reduced to the Form of a Roman Province; and after that, the Whole was conquered, as far as to the Frits of Dumbarton and Edinburgh, by Agricola, in the Time of Domitian; and the Remains of the unconquered Britons retired to the West Part, called Wales, carrying their Language with them over the Mountains, where they have preserv'd it to this Day.

Britain being thus become a Roman Province, tho' still suffer'd to be governed by Kings of its own, as Vice-Roys under the Roman Emperors, the Roman Legions residing in Britain for the Space of above two hundred Years, undoubtedly disseminated the Latin Tongue; and the People being also governed by Laws written in Latin, must necessarily make a Mixture of Languages. This seems to have been the first Mutation the Language of Britain suffered: However, so tenacious were our Forefathers of their Native Language, that it over-grew the Roman.

Thus

I N T R O D U C T I O N.

Thus the British Tongue continued for some time mix'd with Provincial Latin, till the Roman Legions being call'd home, upon account of intestine Troubles, about the Year 433, the Scots and Picts, taking the Advantage of their Absence, harras'd the Northern Parts of Britain; against whom King Vortigern, about the Year 440, call'd in the Assistance of the Saxons, a Great and Potent Nation among the Germans, in the Dukedom of Holstein, but greater by the Aggregation of many People under their Name and Service, as the Jutes from Jutland, and the Angles from Sleswick; who coming hither under the Conduct of Hengist and Horfa, having overcome the Picts and Scots in a pitch'd Battle, near Stamford in Lincolnshire, were afterwards rewarded for this Victory with the Isle of Thanet, and after that with the whole County of Kent, where they governed for about 350 Years, under the Titles of Earls of Kent; but they growing powerful, began afterwards to quarrel with their Landlords, whom by Degrees they dispossess'd of all the Country on this Side the Severn, parcelling it out into seven Kingdoms, called the Saxon Heptarchy, destroying the British Tongue, then mix'd with the Provincial Latin, together with the Inhabitants, by a long and destructive War, the Remains of them being again oblig'd to retire with the British Tongue over the Mountains of Wales.

So the British Language being in a manner quite extinct in all other Parts of Britain, the Saxon Language became the Language of the Country, and so continued till near the Year 800, when the Danes infested England, and made Settlements in the North and East Parts of Britain, and at length, in about 200 Years, arriv'd at the sole Government of it; but their Government lasting only about 26 Years, made not so considerable a Change in the English Saxon, as the next Revolution. Then about the Year 1067, William Duke of Normandy, commonly called William the Conqueror, came over to Britain; and, having vanquish'd Harold the Danish King, made an entire Conquest of Britain: And as a Monument of their Conquest, the Normans endeavoured to yoke the English under their Tongue, as they had them under their Command, by compelling them to teach their Children in their Schools nothing but the French, by publishing their Laws in French, and by enforcing them most rigorously to plead and be impleaded in that Tongue, for the Space of about 350 Years: By which means the Language of Britain became a Dialect of the English Saxon, and Norman French, which now are the Ground-work or Fundamentals of the present Language of Great-Britain.

Having thus shewn how the ancient British Language was in a manner extirpated by the Romans, Danes, and Saxons, and succeeded by the Saxon, and after that, the Saxon blended with the Norman French. Before I proceed to account for the Alteration of the English Saxon, by the two other Causes, I shall mention something relating to the Saxon Tongue, of a great Part of which the Normans despoil'd us, giving a worse for a better. "Great, verily (says Camden) was the Glory of our Tongue before the Norman Conquest, in this, that the Old English could express most aptly all the Conceptions of the Mind in their own Tongue, without borrowing from any:" And of this gives the following Examples.

The Service of God, called Religion, they called San-partner, as the only Assurance and fast Anchor-hold of our Souls Health.

The Gladsome Tidings of Salvation, which the Greeks call Εὐαγγέλιον, they called Gods-spel, i. e. God's Speech.

Our Saviour, in French Savieur, of Salvator, Lat. they called Al-hael, i. e. All-Health.

The Pharisees, Sunder-halgens, i. e. Religious Men, which had sundred and separated themselves from the Mass of the World.

The Scribes, Boc-Men, i. e. Book-Men.

The Sacrament, Palgdom, i. e. Holy Judgment.

Fertility, Eopder Wele, i. e. the Wealth of the Earth.

The Judgment, Dome rettle, i. e. the Settling of Doom.

A Parliament, Witten-mot, i. e. an Assembly of Wise Men.

Coscience, Inpit, i. e. that which they did inwardly wot or know certainly.

Also the Names they gave to their Months were significant; as,

JANUARY [Wulfe-Monað, Sax. i. e. Wolf-Month] because in that Month the Wolves were most mischievous to them, for that, through the Extremity of Cold and Snow, they could not find Beasts sufficient to satisfy their ravenous Appetites.

FEBRUARY [Spnout-Kele, Sax. i. e. Cole-Wort or Spring-Wort] because then Worts begin to sprout.

MARCH [Lenct-Monað, Sax. i. e. the Lengthening Month] because then the Days begin in Length to exceed the Nights.

APRIL [Oorren-Monað, Sax.] because their Easter generally fell in April.

MAY [Tri-milci, Sax. i. e. three Milkings] because they then milk'd their Cattle three Times a Day.

JUNE [Mebe-Monað, Sax. i. e. Meadow-Month] because then their Cattle were turned out to feed in the Meadows.

JULY [Þey-Monað, Sax. i. e. Hay-Month] because then they generally cut their Hay.

AUGUST [Aprn-Monað, Sax. i. e. Barn-Month] because they then filled their Barns.

SEPTEMBER [Lepte-Monað, Sax. i. e. Grist-Month] because they carried their new Corn to the Mill.

OCTOBER [Wyn-Monað, Sax. i. e. Wine-Month] because then Grapes were usually press'd to make Wines.

NOVEMBER [Wynde-Monað, Sax. i. e. Windy-Month] because of the high Winds happening commonly in that Month.

DECEMBER [Wynter-Monað, Sax. i. e. Winter-Month] because of the Cold then growing intense, and afterwards, Þelig-Monað, Sax. i. e. Holy-Month] on account of the Nativity of Christ.

INTRODUCTION.

I shall only add one Piece of Saxon Antiquity more, and so proceed, which is the Lord's Prayer in the Saxon Language, written about the Year of Christ 900, by Alfred Bishop of Durham,

Vnen fader ðic and in þeopnar rīc gehalgud ðin noma
Our Father which art in Heavens be hallowed thine Name to eymeð ðin ric ric ðin willa rīc īf in þeopnar and Ameu.

Amen.

By these Instances it does appear, that the English Saxon Language, of which the Normans dispoiled us in great Part, had its Beauties, was significant and emphatical, and preferable to what they imposed upon us.

This may suffice for the Mutation of our Language upon the first Cause of it, which was Conquest: I now proceed to the other Two.

Secondly, As to Commerce, the Britains having been of a long Time a Trading Nation, as it generally happens, we have had many Words introduced by that Means; and besides, Britain having been a considerable Time under Subjection to the See of Rome in Ecclesiastical Affairs, the Italians coming over hither to manage the Pope's Concerns, and others for Church Dignities, and many Britains going hence to Rome on account of Ecclesiastical Suits, Priesthoods, Abbacies, and Bishopricks, must unavoidably introduce some Italian Words among us.

Thirdly, As to the particular Properties of a Language, our Tongue has undergone no small Mutation, or rather has received no small Improvement upon that Account; for as to the Greek and Latin, the Learned have, together with the Arts and Sciences (now rendered very familiar among us) introduced abundance, nay almost all the Terms of Arts in the Mathematicks, Philosophy, Physick, and Anatomy, with many others from them; and many more have we entertained from the Latin, French, &c. for the sake of Neatness and Elegancy.

So that at this Day our Language, which 1800 Years ago was the ancient British or Welsh, is now a Mixture of Saxon, Teu- tonic, Dutch, Danish, Norman, and Modern French, imbellished with the Greek and Latin.

Yet is not this, I think, any Disparagement to the English Tongue as now spoke (for this Change is nothing but what all Languages have been liable to, and have undergone, and do interchangeably participate each with other, having likewise enfranchised many Words from the Latin and Greek, tho' perhaps not so many as we) but it rather makes to the Advantage of its Character; for transplanting Foreign Words into our Native Soil, and new forming them, we have so enrich'd it, that now it is become the most Copious and Significant Language in Europe, if not in the World.

Thus Camden said of it in his Time, "That though he would not say the English Tongue was as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, yet that it was as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian; so that being beautified and enriched out of other Tongues, partly by enfranchising and indensifying Foreign Words, partly by implanting new ones with artful Composition, our Tongue is as copious, pithy and significant as any other in Europe."

And Dr. Heylin says of it, "That whereas the English Tongue is a Compound of Latin, French, Dutch, &c. it rather adds to its Perfection, than detracts any thing from its Worth, since out of every Language we have culled the most significant Words, and equally participate of what is excellent in them, their Imperfections being rejected: For it is neither so boisterous as the Dutch, nor so effeminate as the French, yet as significant as the Latin, and, in the happy Conjunction of two or more Words in one, little inferior to the Greek."

If then the English Tongue, in the Opinion of these learned Authors, deserved this Character in their Time, how much more now, having since received so considerable Improvements from so many celebrated Writers.

Having given this short Account, by what Steps and Gradations the English Tongue is arrived to be what it now is, I shall proceed to give a brief Account of the Method I have taken in the following Work.

It is not my Design to depreciate the Labours of those worthy Authors, whose Writings of this kind have saved me much Pains: I shall only say, as, facile est inventis addere, in perusing the best Books of this kind extant, I have found in them both a

INTRODUCTION.

Redundancy and Deficiency; the former of which I have omitted, to make room for the latter, having enriched this with several thousand English Words and Phrases in no English Dictionary before extant.

As for the Etymological Part, or those Words from Foreign Languages, whence the English Words were derived, I think I am the first who has attempted it in English, except what Mr. Blunt has done in his Glossography, which is a very small Part, and those of a Latin Derivation chiefly, besides a small Extract of Dr. Skinner's Etymologicon.

However; I shall not enlarge at present upon the Usefulness of that Part, supposing that such Persons who understand the Languages need no such Information; and as to them which do not, the Etymological Part is separated so distinctly from the rest, being inclosed within Crotchets, that they may pass it over without any manner of Trouble or Inconvenience.

In order to the more easy apprehending the Method I have taken, I shall give the following Account:

1. In those Words of a Northern Derivation, I have generally given the Saxon Word first, from whence the English Word, in all Probability, was derived; and afterwards the Teutonic, Danish, and Low-Dutch, where I have found them in the same, or a cognate Signification.
2. In many Words, for which no Saxon Words are to be found, I have given the Teutonic, Low-Dutch, Danish, or others, where they are to be found of the same or a like Signification, though it is very probable they came to us immediately from the Saxon Tongue; but the Fewness of the Books we have now left in the Saxon Language does not furnish us with them; and inasmuch as it is certain, that the English Saxon is no other than a Dialect of the ancient Teutonic, it appears the more probable.
3. In Words derived from the Southern Languages, I have set down the French, and afterwards frequently the Italian and Spanish, if they have them in the same or a like Signification; and lastly, the Latin, from which probably they were all derived.
4. In Terms of Art, as Anatomy, Chymistry, Logick, Mathematicks, Philosophy, Physick, Surgery, and others, I have generally given the French, if they have them; then the Latin, and afterwards the Greek, from whence they generally proceeded.
5. In many Words of a Latin or Greek Original, not properly Terms of Art, I have likewise in the first Place set the French, afterwards the Latin and Greek, so far complying with those who are of Opinion, that we have them immediately, or in the first Place, from the French; though I cannot entirely give into that Notion, for Reasons which will appear in some of the following Articles.

INTRODUCTION.

6. Thus much in the general, but more particularly as for those Words which the French have very near in Spelling, and also the Latin, I have set down the French first, and after the Latin, from which they are derived.

7. In Nouns, especially those that end in ion, as Salvation, Generation, &c. which are evidently derived from the Latin, to avoid the Swelling of the Book, by setting down the Latin and French Words, I have put F. of L. at the End of the Paragraph, which signifies the Words, Generation, Salvation, &c. are as well French as English literally, which come of the Latin, Salvatio, Generatio, &c. and differ only by the Addition of n at the End.

8. In other Nouns, where the English Word is pure Latin, and the French differs in Spelling, in some Letter or Letters, as Author, L. Auteur, F. I have set the French within a Crotchet, and L. at the End, which denotes the Word to be literally Latin.

9. In many Adjectives in ive, as conclusive, &c. which are not found in Latin Dictionaries, though they might be analogically formed, as well as the Adverb conclusively, I have omitted to set L. at the End.

10. In Adjectives and Participles, I have omitted to set down the French, because it appears plain to me, they were rather derived of the Latin than the French, as Desolate, of Desolatus, L. rather than Desolé, F. This may suffice for the rest.

11. As to Verbs, I have for the most part set down the Latin Supines, as the Words from which the English are immediately derived, rather than the Infinitive Moods, especially those of the third Conjugation in Latin, because nearer in the Spelling, as to collect, from Collectum, Supine, rather than Colligere, Infinitive, for the Reason before-mentioned.

I have not confined myself to derive from those Latin Words only, that may be found in Authors call'd Classick, or of the purest Ages of the Latin Tongue; since it is evident we have derived from many Latin Words, which have been handed down to us by Writers of a later Date, Schoolmen, Philosophers, Physicians, Mathematicians, and others.

If any of those Words, given as the Etymon of the English Word, should be thought too remote in Sense or Spelling, it may be sufficient to obviate such an Objection, that nothing is more common in the transplanting Words from one Language to another, than to make considerable Variations; as in the Word Knave, from the Saxon Cnapa, which differs literally and in Sense too; for it signified in Saxon Times no more than Servitour, but now generally is used to signify a dishonest Person. And as to the Spelling, the different Orthography of Nations has so disguised many Words of the same Pronunciation and Signification, that they appear so unlike, that such as are not acquainted with each Language, nor accustomed to Etymological Observations, can hardly discern their Affinity: And besides, very few of the Etymological Words are my own, but I have generally the Suffrage of Somner, Camden, Verstegan, Spelman, Casaubon, Dr. Th. Henshaw, Skinner, Junius, Menagius, Minshew, and other great Names, and approved Etymologists, to bear me out.
to

To conclude; I have omitted nothing to render this Work as compleat as all the Helps I could come at, and other Circumstances would admit of. And I hope, that, considering the vast Variety both of Words and Things, as few Errors have escaped my Notice as could reasonably be expected. If any dissent from me in any Particular, it ought to secure me from Censure, that I pretend only to propose to, and not impose upon, their Judgment; and shall conclude with Horace,

*Si quid novisti rectius istis;
Candidus imperti: si non, his utere mecum.*

This Proverb does not only intimate the Force of Nature, but also of Example; as much the Strength of Imagination and Practise in the latter, as the violent Bent of Inclination in the former. Every Man thinks his own Geese Swans.

This Proverb intimates, that an inbred Philauty runs through the whole Race of Flesh and Blood, and that Self-love is the Mother of Vanity, Pride, and Mistake. It turns a Man's Geese into Swans, his Dung-bill Poultry into Pheasants, and his Lambs into Venison. It blinds the Understanding, perverts the Judgment, depraves the Reason of the otherwise most modest Distinguishers of Truth and Falshy. It makes a Man so fondly conceited of himself, that he prefers his own Art for its Excellency, his own Skill for its Perfection, his own Compositions for their Wit, and his own Productions for their Beauty. It makes even his Vices seem to him Virtues, and his Deformities Beauties; for so every Crow thinks her own Bird fairest, tho' never so black and ugly. Suum cuique pulchrum, say the Latins.
